

YOU DIG?

After spending, oh, the past six months cloistered in your lovely, if claustrophobia-inducing, little home, nothing can keep you from getting out and digging in the dirt this weekend. But one look at your cobwebby garden gloves and that hideous planter your mother-in-law gave you last Christmas, and you know that a makeover's in order. Here are a few of our new faves this spring. We can't guarantee they'll make your garden grow, but they'll look good while you try.

— HOLLY BECKER

Grobal, $24.95, comes in eight colors. Available at Velocity Art & Design, velocityartanddesign.com. If it's a green thumb you lack, these planters come with their own self-watering system.

Bead Garden Gloves, $25. In nine colors and patterns. Available at Hable Construction, hableconstruction.com. These durable, lightweight gloves are as pretty as they are functional.

Plantorb, $104. Available at Perch, perchdesign.net. This white ceramic hanging planter doubles as a bird bath.

Singaraja Pot, $28. Available at Anthropologie, anthropologie.com. This handmade vessel displays modern fronds set against serene aqua, a pattern that would coordinate nicely with succulents.

Teak Herb Box, $18-$24. Available at Jayson Home & Garden, jaysonhomeandgarden.com. Made from sustainable teak, this planter is the ideal spot to cultivate fresh herbs for cooking.

The Retro Bullet Planter, $150-$160 depending on size. Available at Hip Haven, hiphaven.com. Bullet planters were ubiquitous in American homes in the 1950s. They're back again, this time in 12 modern colors including sunny yellow.

Bloomin' Garden Stakes, $38 for six. Available at notNeutral, notneutral.com. Also available locally at Vessel, 125 Kingston St., vessel.com. Liven up the garden with colorful flora and fauna garden stakes.

NYBG Hand Tools Set, $65. Available at the New York Botanical Garden, nybgshop.org. Dig in with quality tools crafted in a traditional English style with handmade oak handles.

